It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

INTRODUCTION.

THE following pages contain a series of examples of a class of documents which have hitherto attracted little attention among antiquaries. They consist of rolls of vellum, on which was written with great care, in bold elegant handwriting, a synopsis of English history, from the earliest period to the time at which they were written. They are usually illustrated with drawings, sometimes illuminated, of the kings and their queens and children, whence they have been spoken of as genealogical rolls of the royal family ; but with a little consideration we may understand their true character. The old feudal gentleman, in his manor-house with his family and guests, had, no doubt, frequent need of some such book of reference on questions connected with the history of his country ; and, indeed, he required such popular historical manuals as these for the instruction of his children. In the baronial hall, after dinner, when the lord of the manor was seated with his guests and followers around his table, songs were sung, and historical as well as romantic poetry was chanted, often connected with old questions of family or with the political movements of the time ; and to decide these or assist in the discussion, the head of the family would bring forth his historical roll. Hence I have thought that the best title to give to these rolls is 'a feudal manual of English history,' and we thus at once understand their purpose and utility. Moreover, when we look upon them in this point of view, these rolls present new points of interest. They furnish us with the facts of English history as they were received in mediæval times; and sometimes we may find an anecdote or an opinion which is new to us; and, which is quite as important, they give us the amount of knowledge relating to the history of his country which it was considered that an English baron or gentleman of the feudal period ought to possess, as well as its special colour and character. This is a fact of no little value, if we would fully understand the transactions of those times.

Most of the English gentry of the feudal period seem to have possessed manuals of this description, which, when they were no longer used, were preserved by their descendants and successors as family relics among their other books and papers long after their meaning was forgotten; and thus they have remained shut up in boxes of family records and in neglected cupboards, until our own time, when they are accidentally brought forth as curiosities. In fact, they do not belong to what are called, strictly speaking, our national records. Yet there is another circumstance connected with them which is not without its interest.

We might suppose, from what I have said, that similar manuals would have been in use among the feudal families in all countries where feudalism prevailed. Yet this seems not to have been the case. I have never been able to meet with an example of similar rolls in any country except England. I have been informed, by a French antiquary of good authority, that there is or was in the National Archives of France in Paris a single example, a roll, which he believed to contain a manual of French history, but this appears not to be quite certain. It is true that the family papers of the old feudal families in France have perished more generally than in England; but I think that there appear to be sufficient reasons for believing that these feudal manuals were peculiar to England, though copies might be carried hence into other lands.

The universal language of Feudalism was the French. The political system of Feudalism had arisen in France, and it carried the French language with it wherever it went. It is the language in which the oldest of these manuals are written, and they all reproduce one text, with only such variations as we might expect to find in the manuscripts of a mediæval popular work of this description. They no doubt represent the original model of the manual as it was made for the feudal gentleman, which we might almost describe as the "Goldsmith's History of England" of feudal times. We also find such manuals in Latin, of which I give two in the present volume.

These were probably made for feudal barons who were ecclesiastics, for Latin was the language of the church. The texts of these Latin manuals differ entirely from each other and from the French model, and contain entries relating to the promotions or deaths of ecclesiastics which show for what class of society they were designed. I have only met with one of these rolls written in the English language. It belongs to the reign of Henry VI, or of Henry VII, the period when, in our country, the English language had taken the place of the French, especially in the North of England. This roll, which is elegantly written and illuminated, has perhaps been made for some high and wealthy family on the northern border, and especially relates to Scottish history and to the international wars and rivalries.

I have said that these historical manuals are not usually found among our national records, but that they have been preserved among the papers of old families, whence they are sometimes brought out as objects of curiosity, and so come into the possession of private collectors. It was in this manner that, a few months ago, the first of the manuals printed in the present volume came into the possession of my very respected friend Mr. Joseph Mayer of Liverpool, whose love for historical antiquities is known to all who are interested in historical research. Mr. Mayer communicated the roll to me, and, on my explanation of its character and interest, expressed the wish to print it. On further consideration of the subject, it was resolved to publish a small collection of these manuals, and the result is the volume now given to the public, which contains all the rolls of this description with which I am at present acquainted. They are six in number—three in French, two in Latin, and one in English; and the following notes will, I think, give a sufficient idea of their several peculiarities.

I. The first on our list is the one already mentioned, now in the possession of Mr. Joseph Mayer. It commences with king Ethelbert, and brings the history down to the reign of Edward I, early in whose reign it appears to have been written. It presents, in fact, every characteristic of a good manuscript of the latter half of the thirteenth century. It is a perfect example of the model text of the feudal manual of English history, in its original language, French.

II. The original of our second manual, also in French, is preserved in the British Museum, where it is marked among the Additional MSS., and numbered No. 21,368. It is brought down to the reign of Richard II, and it is called in the title given to it in the Catalogue in the British Museum, a "Genealogical Roll of the Kings of England from Egbert to Richard II."

III. The British Museum has also furnished our third example of the manual, which is marked among the Lansdowne Charters as "Rot. No. 3." This history is brought down to the reign of Henry III, and was written probably in the first half of the thirteenth century.

If we compare these three Manuals together, we see that they all belong to the same text, with only such variations as are usually found in the different copies of the same books in the early manuscripts. They are all one and the same Manual of English History—in fact, the Manual designed for the use of the feudal class, of which there was one text, no doubt looked upon as the text of authority. Perhaps some of the variations were dictated by the person for whom the copy was made, or by the knowledge which the copyist possessed of his sentiments. Of course, under circumstances which we might explain if we knew intimately the history of the roll, we find additional paragraphs, a curious instance of which is furnished by our Manual No. II. It appears to have been, on one side of the vellum, either an abridged copy of the Manual, or a copy of the original Manual when it was not quite so complete as we find it at present. Some possessor of the roll has, apparently, had it collated with other rolls, and the additional matter, and perhaps other additional items, added on the back of the vellum (in dorso). In printing this roll in the following pages, I have inserted these additions in their places, with a † in each case at the beginning of the paragraph, to indicate that it is taken from the back of the vellum.

There is another purpose to which the back of the vellum of these rolls was often applied. The original Manual in French belonged to a social circle, in which the popular literature of the age, represented especially by the metrical romances, occupied much of the leisure of the household, and in fact these were no doubt read and chaunted at the table in the feudal Hall. This was, of course, the business of the minstrel who attended at the table, and who gave the popular poetry from his memory; but we might expect that the family which possessed one of these feudal manuals would often be sufficiently interested in the popular literature of the time, especially in the poetry, of which chiefly it consisted, to wish to preserve copies. The back of the roll, which in copies of this Manual was left blank, offered a ready place for such copy or copies; and we find a good example of this in the first of the Manuals printed in the present volume, that of which the original is in the collection of Mr. Mayer. On the back of this roll is written one of the medieval romances in French verse, that of Idoine and Amadas, a full account of which, with an analysis, is given by M. Emile Littré, in the twenty-second volume of the Histoire Littéraire de la France.

IV. The fourth of our Manuals is in Latin. It forms a small roll of vellum, and is preserved among the Campbell Charters in the British Museum, where it is numbered XXI. 4. It differs entirely in its character from the French Manual, although it has been made to serve the same purposes. I have already remarked that the Latin Manuals appear to have been made for the Ecclesiastical barons, whose special language was Latin. To a certain degree the clerical Manual might be expected to present somewhat of the character of the monastic chronicle, which was the chronicle of English history made for the monks, placed, no doubt, in their library, and used for giving information to those who had no historical manual of their own, and came to the monks to seek their knowledge. Just so, the Latin manual here given has more of the character of a chronicle; it begins with a rather full history of the fabulous period, founded upon the story of Geoffrey of Monmouth, which is continued by a series of entries of historical events under their dates, quite in the style of an ordinary monastic chronicle, down to the year 1314, the seventh year of the reign of Edward II.

A very slight view of this Latin manual is sufficient to shew that it was made for an ecclesiastic. It contains numerous notices of the promotions or deaths of bishops and other ecclesiastical dignitaries, especially of the dioceses of Lincoln and Coventry, and of the foundations of religious houses; among the latter of which we may mention that of Merevale in Warwickshire (Mirival), Tiltey in Essex (Tilteya), Stanlawe in Cheshire, Crokesden in Staffordshire, and Witham in Essex (Witenham). The bishops of whom the promotions and deaths are more especially recorded here are those of Lincoln, from which we might be led to suppose that this manual of English history was made for some ecclesiastic, or at least by some ecclesiastic, in the Lincoln diocese. But we have, in the text of the roll itself, the means of fixing more exactly the locality in which it was compiled, and to which it belonged. We soon discover, in reading it, that it belonged to a monastic house, to an abbey, in which, when we consider what we have already had to say in regard to the feudal manual, its place was probably the monastic hall rather than the monastic library. Among the dignitaries, therefore, whose promotions or deaths are recorded in this history, we might expect to find the abbots of the house. We thus find (p. 101), under the date of A.D. 1273, that in the December of that year died William de Lincoln, the thirteenth abbot, and are immediately told that he was succeeded by Walterus de Hotoft. When we refer to Dugdale's Monasticon, we find that these two names belonged to two successive abbots of the abbey of Thornton on Humber, in the county of Lincoln.

Comparing these with some other allusions in the text, there can be no doubt that this Latin manual of history belonged to the abbey of Thornton on Humber, in Lincolnshire, having been made probably by one of the monks of that house for the abbot. There appears to be a break in the chronicle after the year 1289, perhaps indicated by the words Hic dimisi, and the continuation which follows is probably the work of another compiler, whose first entry commemorates the departure of Walter de Hotoft from the abbacy. From this date the entries in this chronicle are continued without interruption to the year 1314, that of the death of king Philippe of France, when this roll appears to have been concluded. Thornton is at present a village on the banks of the Humber, but there are still considerable remains of its ancient abbey. It is curious that the abbot and monks of this house seem to have taken an interest in the affairs of Wales, of which this historic roll contains some curious notices. It also takes particular notice of the troubles in Scotland.

v. The second of our Latin manuals is a much finer roll than the first, and it contains so many curious narratives of Welsh affairs, such as the rebellion of Owen Glendower, that we can hardly doubt that it was made for some feudal baron on the borders of Wales. This remarkable roll in the original begins with a small illumination of Adam engaged with a spade digging in his garden. Then are given the names of Adam's children. Then follow the names of their children and descendants in smaller circles, and the biblical genealogy is thus traced down to Noah, and from him through a variety of fabulous personages down to the Trojans and to Brutus, and we are thus brought to the old British history. As we go on, the British history occupies the centre or main column of the roll, with the right side, while the left side is occupied by the northern and Teutonic peoples from whom our English peoples are derived. At length we come to King Lucius, the reputed first Christian king in our island, and then we have the histories of the Roman, British, and Saxon kings. As the history, in all this early part of the roll, seems to be of no value, and is accompanied with equally useless genealogical tables of the fabulous kings which would give great inconvenience in printing, I have thought better to omit them, and I have here begun this roll with the famous name of Arthur. Hence the roll is here carefully printed to the end. It will be seen that the compiler has given in the margin on the right hand side the names of the Welsh princes contemporary with the English and Norman kings. These names of the contemporary Welsh princes are, indeed, continued after the accession of William the Conqueror down to the reign of Henry VI, with which this roll concludes. It may be remarked that the left margin of the text of this roll is occupied by a descending line of the successive archbishops of Canterbury from the time of St. Augustine to the reign of Henry VI.

Of the history of this roll little is known. After it had passed away from the descendant of the family to which it originally belonged, it found its way among the London booksellers, and came thus into the possession of Mr. John Camden Hotten, in whose catalogue of topographical books, published in 1864, its title appears. It passed thence into the possession of a gentleman in Wales, who is the worthy representative of several of the best of the old families of former times, both Welsh and English, T. L. Duncombe Jones Parry, Esq., M.P., F.S.A., etc., of Madryn Castle, near Pwllheli in Caernarvonshire, by whose kind permission we are enabled to print this curious historical manual in the present volume.

vi. The last of the manuals contained in our volume is the history already mentioned as written in the English language. It is a broader roll than any of the others, and is handsomely written in pure English, except that here and there it betrays marks of a North-Anglian or Scottish dialect. And when we look through it, we find so many and constant allusions to Scottish history, especially to the risings and wars of the Scots against England, which, at the time of its compilation, were quite recent, that we feel that it must have had a close relation with Scotland, and we might be led to suppose that it was made for some great English family on the border. It was the opinion, however, of the compiler of the manuscript catalogue of these charters, now placed in the Reading Room of the British Museum, I suppose Sir Frederick Madden, and probably he was right, that this manuscript was made for our King Henry VII, and this opinion seems to be confirmed by that king's arms illuminated at the commencement of the roll.

The original French feudal Manual has one peculiarity which must not be overlooked. It had at the head, or commencement, a sort of description of England, and of some of its peculiarities, and of its partition into several separate kingdoms, which was arranged in a large circle, as radiating from its centre towards the north, south, east, and west. This preliminary account concludes with some Latin verses, and appears to have been compiled chiefly from the introductory matter in the History by Henry of Huntingdon. In the first of the Manuals here printed, that belonging to Mr. Mayer, this introductory sketch, being naturally more exposed to injury than the rest, had been so much torn and effaced, that I thought it better to omit it, and have merely commenced with the history of the kings, which immediately follows this introductory matter. The second copy of the Manual begins imperfectly, a part of this introductory matter being torn off, but I have printed here what remains, consisting chiefly of the Latin verses on England mentioned before. These Latin verses are taken from Henry of Huntingdon's copy. As the last of the French rolls, the third, was the only one complete, I thought it advisable, with it, to print the whole of this introductory matter, which I have given in rather a smaller type than the rest of the text, and I have not sought to arrange it in a circle, like the original.*

* It will be seen that in the two texts of these verses which I have given (printed here at pp. 38 and 63), there is a variation in the name of the town cited in the last line for the beauty of its appearance. In the first it is :—

Testis Heli formosa situ, Rovecestria visu.

In the other,

Testis Heli formosa situ, Tonecestria visu.

The latter word appears to be very distinctly written in the MS., but it may perhaps be intended to be read as Touecestria, and may be thus intended

There is one other remark I wish to make on these curious literary relics, which refers to their shape. The roll appears to have been the original form of the book, and was no doubt derived to medieval times from the Romans. The Greek and Latin books found in the libraries of Herculaneum were written in rolls, as were also those which have been found in the monuments of Egypt. This accounts for the Roman word for a book, volumen, or volume, which, derived from the Latin verb volvo, means literally a roll, and was preserved in the feudal language derived from the Latin. The modern form of the book was no doubt derived from the tabula, or table-book. There is a curious illustration of this for Towcester in Northamptonshire. In the printed text of Henry of Huntingdon (in Savile's Rerum Anglicarum Scriptores post Bedam), these lines are introduced and given as follows (p. 299).

De cujus laude quidam ita scripsit :—

Illa quidam longe celebri splendore beata
Glebis, lacte, favis, supereminet Insula cunctis, Quas regit ille Deus, spumanti cujus ab ore
Profluit Oceanus.

Et paulo post :—

Testes Londoniæ ratibus, Wintonia Baccho, Herforda grege, Wirecestria fruge redundans,
Batha lacu, Salebira feris, Cantuaria pisce,
Eboracum sylvis, Excestria clara metallis.
Norvicium Dacis, Hybernis Cestria, Gallis
Cicestrum, Norwageniis Dunelma propinquans.

subject in an engraving in my new history of domestic manners, The Homes of Other Days, p. 109. It is taken from an illuminated manuscript of the Norman period. A party, apparently of monks or scholars, are seated together reading and discoursing. Two of them distinctly hold in their hands rolls, which are both unrolled for reading, and the third holds a tabula, on which he appears to be writing. The form of the roll for the book was continued through the Middle Ages, and as it gradually went out of use before the book in its tabular or more modern form, the old form was preserved only in official libraries, and it is thus that we have the rolls of parliament, the household rolls, and the record rolls of various descriptions, which mean literally parliament books, household books, and record books. The materials from the earliest periods appear to have been vegetable in some shape or other. The Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans, down to a low period, used the papyrus or paper. But the Romans are said to have used first the bark (liber) of a tree for that purpose, from whence is derived the Latin word liber, a book. Our own word book, derived directly from our Anglo-Saxon forefathers, is another form of boc, beech, which is said to have been the material they used for writing. The use of parchment, or vellum, for writing, was universal in the European Middle Ages, and appears only to have finally given way to paper in the course of the fourteenth century, on the approach of the art of printing.

As some may find a difficulty in reading this old French of the early texts of the Feudal Manual, I have thought it best to accompany the first copy with a modern English translation. This I have not considered necessary to repeat in the other copies of the same text; and I have not thought it at all needful to give a translation of the Latin texts, and still less so of the English.

ETHELBERT.

THIS Ethelbert, the son of Alcmund, was born and bred in Wessex, who was a very brave and valiant youth. But King Brithric, who then reigned in Wessex, was jealous of him, and sought to kill him, because he feared that he would deprive him of his kingdom. When Ethelbert perceived this plot, he fled into France, where he learnt good manners and courtesies, and practice of arms. At that time Charlemagne the Great reigned in France forty-six years. There Ethelbert remained until Brithric was dead. After that the Westsaxons sent to fetch Ethelbert, and made him king. ETHELWULF.

This Ethelwulf reigned after his father. And he gave to God and to holy church the tenth hide of land of all Wessex, free and quit of all secular service, to feed and clothe the poor. Then he went to Rome, and gave every year for each house in England a penny, which is called St. Peter's penny. Then he gave each year three hundred bezants of silver, one hundred to the light of St. Peter, and the other hundred to the light of St. Paul, and a hundred to the Pope, then returned into France, and took to wife the daughter of Charles the Bald. He reigned twenty years and five months, then died, and lies at Winchester.

These two brothers, Ethelbald and Ethelbert, shared the kingdom between them, and reigned together. But Ethelbald died at the end of five months, and his brother Ethelbert was afterwards king of the whole, and reigned only a year, and then died. And Ethelred reigned, who was the third brother.

This Ethelred was a good man before God and before the world. He reigned after his brother Ethelbert. The Danes attacked him so fiercely that they gave him battle in the field nine times in four years. Nevertheless, he beat them often, and was rarely beaten. But we must not forget the

This Alfred, the son of Ethelwulf, reigned after his brother Ethelbred. He was a clever man, and wise in all things. He was the first king of all who was anointed, and who took the crown of the whole kingdom from the pope Leo. He kept such good peace in England that he caused to be hanged up chains of gold in common passages and along the ways, whereof he caused such peace to be established that no passer-by was so bold that he dared take or plunder anything. Of those rents which belonged to him annually, he ordained thus: he caused all his rents to be divided into two parts, one of which parts he divided into three, and assigned one part to his servants of his court, the other part to his workmen in divers places, and the third part to poor strangers. And the other half of his rents he divided into four parts; the one part he assigned to the poor needy in his land, the other part to the poor houses of religion, the third part to the poor clerks, the fourth part to the English from beyond sea. And the half of as much as he could purchase rightfully he gave to the abbeys. And he established many laws, which are still entitled in his name.

This same Alfred ordered his life in such manner that he divided the twenty-four hours of the day and the night into three parts: eight hours he spent in afflictions and prayers, and the other eight in the sustenance of his body in eating, in drinking, and in reposing, and the other eight he spent in talking and in holding counsel of the state and of the government of his land. And he had seven servants in his chapel appointed especially to announce the hours, and to take care of the light, and thus he distinguished by equal candles all his life. He reigned in great labour twenty-eight years and a half, and died, and was buried at Winchester.

Ceti Edward, le fiz Alvred, ne fu pas si sage come son pere de lettrure, mès il fu plus glorieus de real poer. Quointes home fu, e plein de grant force. E il regna noblement en Engleterre. En chescune bataille où il entra il avoit la victorie, e por ce ne furent pas les Daneis unkes si hardiz de entrer en la terre tant cum il vesqui. This Edward, the son of Alfred, was not so wise as his father in letters, but he was more glorious in royal power. He was a clever man, and full of great strength. And he reigned nobly in England. In every battle into which he entered he had the victory, and therefore the Danes were never so bold as to enter the land so long as he lived. He of three wives he had begat seven children, of whom three entered into religion (adopted a monastic life). And he established seven bishops, and assigned their bishoprics. He reigned twenty-four years, and lies at Winchester.

And though he was a fighting man, nevertheless he caused to be built several monasteries. He had a sister very fair, who was named Edilda, whom Hugh, king of France, demanded as wife, for whose love he sent to king Athelstan precious gifts, that is to say, horses covered with arms, and precious stones of all kinds, and the sword of the emperor Constantine, and one of the three nails of the Saviour's, and the lance, and the banner of Saint Maurice. And he also sent him part of the cross of our Lord, and of the crown of thorns, and a cross adorned with precious stones. Which relics received, the king rejoiced much over them, and sent him his sister. He reigned nobly twenty-six years, and died, and was buried at Malmesbury.

This Edmund, the brother of Athelstan, of the age of about eighteen years, reigned after his brother, and held the kingdom six years and a half. He drove out of the kingdom the Danes and the Normans, and all the foreigners. And after, when he had done all this, he was brought to confusion through treason. For when he came to Canterbury to the feast of St. Augustin, he saw a thief whom he had before-time banished, who was named John, on whom the king revenged himself fiercely, and took him with force by the temples, and has struck him to the ground. And the thief drew forth a sword with which he was secretly girded, and struck the king in the face, and slew him, and wounded many of his attendants. And the thief was there slain, and the king buried at Glastonbury. And he reigned six years and a half.

He reigned all alone over all the parts of England, and did many things to people's will which they asked of him. And he passed from this world gloriously. And the blessed friend of Jesus Christ, St. Dunstan, who was a man of good life and clean, heard an angel's voice at the death of this Edred. He reigned nine years and a half, and was buried at Winchester.

KING EDWIN.

This Edwin, the son of Edmund, reigned after Edred, and held the kingdom four years. He was bad, and luxurious, and behaved himself ill towards God and towards all people. And as long as he reigned, holy church was ill-treated and enslaved. This same Edwin was a very handsome man, but he was entirely abandoned to the foolish pleasures of his body. For on the day of his coronation he took from a great lord his wife on account of her beauty. And nevertheless this same woman was his cousin. And this same man made war upon holy church, and especially upon St. Dunstan. Who, after he had reigned four years, died disgracefully, and was buried at Winchester.

KING EDGAR.

This Edgar was a peaceful man, and the son of Edmund, and reigned after his brother. He was the most gracious of all his predecessors, and

On the first he begat Edward, who afterwards was martyr, and St. Edith; on the second Edmund and Ethelred. Which Edgar, when he had reigned sixteen years, and had caused to be erected many monasteries, died and surrendered his soul to God. This Edgar, when St. Dunstan was born, heard the angels chanting and saying, "Peace, as long as this man shall reign and Dunstan shall live." And so it happened. He was sixteen years old when he began to reign. He was a man of great goodness, and of great worth, and dear and amiable to God and to all people. And he reigned sixteen years in peace and in abundance of all goods. No one was more just than he, or more strict in all judgments. He spared no man's quality. He judged the rich as well as the poor, according to their riches come les povres solum lor trepas. En son tens l'en ne trovoit nul robur ne laron ne esmovant guerre ou noise ke il n'en feist maintenant la justice. Every year of the sixteen during which he reigned he founded either an abbey or a church, the sanctity of which was apparent after his death. And after forty years during which he lay buried, and he was about to be translated, he was found entire, and the blood running from him all fresh and new, and for his miracles he was held for a saint.

REX ELDREDUS.

Iceti Ethelred, le fiz Edgar, si comensa à regner après la mort son frere, ki fu cruelement ocis. De cetui pro-lay snares for her stepson. And as this Edward came from hunting one day all weary, and his knights were scattered over the plain, he passed by chance before the house of his stepmother. And she by her blandishments caused him to wait, and kissed him in treason, and offered him to drink. And while he was drinking, she wounded him in the body. And the saint was cruelly hurt, and returned to his people as well as he could. And when he found them, he showed them the signs of his death, of blood which ran down to his feet and on the road. He reigned three years and a half, and died, and was buried at Shaftesbury.

KING ETHELRED.

This Ethelred, the son of Edgar, began to reign after the death of his brother, who was cruelly slain. It was of him that St. Dunstan pro-pheta seint Donstan, quant il le baptiza, por ce k'il pissa en fons, e dit, "Le curs de la vie à cetui serra cruel au comencement, et cheitif en milu, e très maleurus en la fin." E en .x. anz après, ke seint Donestan veski, il regna en pes; e après son decès, le[s] Daneis vindrent tuz les anz wastant la terre, e assaillanz le rei par la traison Edrith counte de Salopesburi, ke tuz jors monstroit le conseil le rei à ses enemis. Iceti Ethelred engendra Emun Yreneside de une femme aliene, ke fu sa concubine. E de sa femme esposé, Emme, ke fu la soer au duc de Nomandie, il engendra Alvred, ki fu trai par Godwin counte de Kent, e Edward le confessor, ki gist à Westmoster. And during ten years after, which St. Dunstan lived, he reigned in peace; and after his death, the Danes came every year, ravaging the land, and attacking the king through the treason of Edric, earl of Shrewsbury, who every day betrayed the king's counsel to his enemies. This Ethelred begat Edmund Ironside on a foreign woman, who was his concubine. And of his married wife, Emma, who was sister of the duke of Normandy, he begat Alfred, who was betrayed by Godwin, earl of Kent, and Edward the Confessor, who is buried at Westminster. He reigned thirty-seven years, and died, and was buried at London in St. Paul's.

Car si come le rei Knut veneit par Engleterre ausi come tyrant Eamun li vint à l'encontre e desconfist forment son ost. E à l'autre foiz quant il vint, Emun fu si confus par la traison de l'avantdit Edrith, k'il s'i conveneit partir son reaume avekes. E si fu enterré à Glastinburi. This Edmund Ironside reigned after his father through his prowess. His lance and his sword were never drawn in vain. He was a man of great vigour and of marvellous endurance. No one could overcome him in battle, or withstand him, if the treason of Edrith had not happened. For when king Cnut came through England, also like a tyrant, Edmund met him, and discomfited entirely his army. And the other time when he came, Edmund was so confounded by the treason of the aforesaid Edrith, that he was obliged there to divide his kingdom with him, and he was buried at Glastonbury. He had begotten a son whose name was Edward, who feared the cruelty of Cnut, and fled into Hungary after the death of his father, and took the sister of the king of Hungary to wife.

KING CNUT, OF THE DANES.

Harold Harefoot. Hardeknut was his other son.

This Cnut the Dane reigned after the death of Edmund Ironside. And never before him, since the time of the great Arthur, was a king of England of so great power ; for he was lord of Denmark, and of Norway, and of Scotland, and of England after Edmund Ironside. In the first year after his coronation, all those who had slain king Edmund through the treachery of Edrith the traitor came to him in hope of being nobly rewarded by king Cnut. And the king caused all his baronage to assemble, and before them all was the treason made evident. And li rei Knut [les] fist trestuz morir de vileine mort. Après ce mut un contec à Londres, en un soler sor Tamise, entre le rei Knut e l'avant dit conte Edrith, e li counte en reprochant dist au rei, "Je gerpi mon dreit seignor naturel, e le fist tuer, e te fis livrer le reaume." E li rei ravissant la parole de sa bouche, dit : "Tu as parlé à la nulance de tun chef. Tu moras par dreit jugemen[t] por ce ke tu as ocis tun seignor naturel e mon frere en lei." E maintenant li furent les peez e les mains liés, e fu geté en Tamise. E issi peri li counte. Le rei Knut regna .xx. anz, e fu enterré a Winchester.

therefore king Cnut caused them all to die a disgraceful death. After this arose a quarrel at London, in a soler (upper room) over the Thames, between king Cnut and the aforesaid earl Edrith, and the earl said reproachingly to the king, "I deserted my rightful natural lord, and caused him to be slain, and delivered up the kingdom to thee." And the king, snatching the word from his mouth, said, "Thou hast spoken to the injury of thy head. Thou shalt die by just judgment, because thou hast slain thy natural lord and my brother in law." And immediately his feet and hands were bound, and he was thrown into the Thames. And thus perished the earl. King Cnut reigned twenty years, and was buried at Winchester.

This Edward fled into Hungary on account of Cnut the tyrant, where he begat those who are here written. But the generation of Margaret went before them.

This Maude, daughter of king Henry, was afterwards married to Henry the emperor, that is, in the year of grace a thousand and one hundred and ten. And by God's will, he in the year of grace a thousand and one hundred and fifty-four, died. And after his death, this same Henry, duke of Normandy, conquered the crown of the realm. This Henry is called the second. And this line lasts to the circle where Maude, daughter of the king of Scotland by St. Margaret, is inscribed.

This Harold Harefoot was bastard, and begotten by Cnut on the daughter of earl Efflem. He reigned after his father four years and four months, and died, and was buried at Westminster.

He was a king of so great liberality, that he caused to be laid out every day four times a royal meal in his court. And in one particular year, that is the second of his reign, he was found dead in a drinking-bout, and was buried at Winchester.

HARDICNUT THE FIFTH OF THE DANES.

In the year of grace a thousand and forty-two, Edward, son of King Ethelred, was recalled from Normandy where he was bred; and he reigned after the Danes as rightful heir. He by strength of the English took to wife the daughter of Godwin the strong, earl of Kent, who was

This Edward recalled from Hungary his nephews and his nieces, namely, Edgar Etheling, whom he loved especially, and desired that he might be his heir and successor to the kingdom. And the peaceful Edward reigned 24 years and 6 months and 20 days. And so departed this life for the celestial kingdom on the eve of the Epiphany. And Edgar Atheling, regarding the affairs of England in tribulation, after the death of his uncle, he caused his ships to be furnished, and entered both himself and his sisters, and had in purpose to return into Hungary, where he was born and bred. But through a tempest which then arose on the sea, they arrived in Scotland. SANCTUS EDWARDUS CONFESSOR, XIII.

Iceti seint Edward, home de pité e plein de dreiture, puis il comensa à regner, il eveilla la lei ke fu endormie lxviij. anz, par le conseil del baronage de Engleterre, e puis le conferma. E quant ele fu confirmée, si fu appelé la le au rei Edward, ne mi por ce k'il la trovast premerement, mès por ce k'ele fu lessée e oblié, puis le jorir au rei Edgar, sun ael, ki premerement la trova, si cum l'en dit, dekes a son tens, c'est à saver .lxviij. anz. ST. EDWARD THE CONFESSOR, XIII.

This St. Edward, a man of pity and full of justice, after he began to reign, he awoke the law, which was asleep 68 years, by the counsel of the baronage of England, and afterwards confirmed it ; and, when it was confirmed, it was called the law of King Edward, not because he found it first, but because it was left and forgotten since the days of King Edgar, his ancestor, who first found it, as people say, until his time, that is 68 years. This Edward renewed it, and gave it to keep as his.

Some say that St. Edward, seeing the wickedness of his people, and

And therefore he arranged before his death that William the Bastard, who was duke of Normandy, and his cousin, and a strong man and warlike, should be his successor of his kingdom ; which kingdom aforesaid the foresaid William the Bastard obtained and conquered vigorously by great victory.

KING HAROLD, SON OF GODWIN, EARL OF ESSEX.

This Harold, son to Godwin earl of Kent, and brother to the queen, reigned by force and by lignage, after the death of St. Edward the Confessor, and crowned himself at Westminster. He reigned one year, or nine months only, according to others, and after he was disinherited, reigned after his father. He went to hunt in the New Forest, and was spied by Walter Tyrel, and was struck by an arrow, and died. He did always all the evil that he could. He was bad to strangers, and worse to his own, and very unfortunate to himself. Everything which pleased God and those who loved God, displeased the king and those who loved the king. He died, and was buried at Winchester. At whose burial there was seen so much joy, that there was not a tear shed. For in the time of that king, St. Anselm was despoiled of all his goods, and he was exiled until the end of the life of this king William. And St. Wulstan, who was bishop of Worcester, and a man of holy life, departed gloriously from this world to God in joy everlasting.

And in this same year, Thomas, archdeacon of Canterbury, was made chancellor of the kingdom, and archbishop of Canterbury, who was martyized.

This same Henry the second, after he had reigned 34 years and seven months and five days, died, and in the year of grace a thousand and one hundred and eighty-nine, on the octaves of St. Peter and St. Paul, and was buried at Fontevrard. And in his time St. Thomas was martyized.

KING RICHARD THE FIRST, AFTER THE CONQUEST.

After the death of king Henry the second, his son Richard reigned, and was crowned on the third of the nones of September, in the year of grace a thousand and one hundred and ninety-one; and in the time following, the king of France, Philippe, and the foresaid Richard, king of England, took their way in one company towards the Holy Land, and the king of

Dont li rei Richard enbrase de ire si comensa medlée ovekes son enemy, e le venki, e li fit lier, e prist ses tresors. France went before. And king Richard of England, putting to sea afterwards had with him thirteen very large ships which are called busses, with three manner of sails. And he had also with him a hundred ships laden, and fifty gallies, who arrived at Cyprus ten days afterwards. And Currath, lord of Cyprus, came to meet him, and forbade him the harbour. Upon which king Richard, burning with anger, began the combat with his enemy, and vanquished him, and caused him to be put in bonds, and took his treasures. And when he had ordered all things there at his will, he followed the king of France with great glory. And as he was on the sea he saw a very large ship called dromon, which came against him, and he took this and caused to drown in the sea a thousand and three hundred pagans, and to keep two hundred all alive. And thereafter he took Damietta, and other neighbouring castles towards Babylonia

E puis repeira à ses propretez, si passa par Osteruche, de Osteruche e detenu par la treison de Franceis, la quele treison fu puis esprovée. Car le rei de France Felipe, retornant de la terre seinte, ki avoit envie à ses benurez fes, si mist démentirs la terre de Normandie en tribulacion, e ocupa les chausteus e les garnisons, dekes celui meimes Richard, le rei glorious, retorna en Normandie, après la raunson ke fu fete au derein. with armed force, and seven thousand camels laden with all kinds of riches, and he distributed them with great liberality among all his army. And then he returned to his estates, and passed through Austria. By Austria he is detained through the treason of the French, which treason was afterwards proved. For the King of France, Philippe, returning from the Holy Land, who was envious of his fortunate acts, put on his way the land of Normandy in tribulation, and occupied the castles and garrisons, until Richard himself, the glorious king, returned into Normandy, after the ransom which was made to the latter. As he came into Aquitaine after the voyage from beyond the seas, and directed his road towards England, he laid siege to the castle of Chabis with all his host, which the King of France had occupied, and there he was struck by a poisoned dart.

KING JOHN.

This John reigned after his brother king Richard. He made three several oaths, namely, that he would love and honour holy church and its ordinaries, and that he would abolish bad laws and establish good ones, and that he would support right and justice in his reign. Alas ! what grief ! Among all christian kings, he was previously the most free, and from his own degree of free he made himself serf, and made the glorious realm of England a tributary. And when he had reigned eighteen years and five months, after much of tribulations, and divers

Henri e dit le tiers, por ce k'il est entitlé en cronikes e en escriz e en chartris ne mie por la reison de noun, mès par la reison de real seignurie ou de digneté. Car si le premer Henri le fiz au Conqueror soit conté, e puis Henri le fiz à l'emperice, e après le fiz à celui Henri ki fu dit Henri le jovene rei, sanz doute iceti sera le quart Henri. Mès por ce ke celui Henri ki fu dit le jovene rei ne regna mie, kar il morud au vivant son pere, por ce par la reison de ceus ki regnerent iceli Henri si est dit li tiers.

Iceti Henri, dedens le diseme an de son age, le jor sein Symon e sein Jude, si fu corrouné à grant joie. Al quel corrounement il jura ke il portereit honor e pes e reverence à Deu e à seint eglise e à ses ordineires, e ce fist-il noblement. Iceti comensa la novele ovre de West-called the Third because he is so entitled in chronicles and writings and charters, not by right of the name, but by right of real lordship or dignity. For if the first Henry, the son of the Conqueror, be counted, and after Henry the son of the empress, and afterwards the son of that Henry who was called Henry the young king, without doubt this would be the fourth Henry. But because that Henry who was called the young king did not reign, for he died while his father was still living, therefore, reckoning those who reigned, this Henry is called the Third.

This Henry the Second, in the tenth year of his age, on the day of St. Simon and St. Jude, was crowned with great joy. At which coronation he swore that he would bear honour and peace and reverence to God and to Holy Church and to its ordinaries; and this he did nobly. He began the new work at Westminster, in honour of God, and of Deinde vocato coram rege prædicto Bertramo, dixit ei rex, "Quid tibi malefeci, quare me occidisti?" Cui ille quasi intrepidus respondit, "Tu interemisti patrem meum et duos fratres meos manu tua, et nunc me interimere voluisti; sume ergo de me vindictam qualemcunque excogitaveris, quia non est mihi curæ, dummodo interficiaris, qui tot mala intulisti mundo." Magnifico principi, domino Edwardo Dei gratia regi Angliæ, Johannes eadem gratia Scotiæ rex. Cum vos, ac alii de regno vestro, vobis non ignorantibus, vel saltem ignorare non debentibus, per violentiam vestram potentiam nobis et regni nostri incolis graves ac intolerabiles injurias, contemptus, et gravamina, necnon dampna enormia contra nostras et regni nostri libertates, ac contra Deum et justitiam notorie et frequenter intulistis, nos extra regnum nostrum, ad levem cujuscumque suggestionem, pro libito voluntatis vestræ citando, et indebite vexando, castra nostra, terras, possessiones nostras et nostrorum infra regnum vestrum, injuste et sine juris demeratis(?), occupando bona nostra et subditorum nostrorum, tam per terram quam per mare rapiendo, et infra regnum vestrum receptando, mercatores et alios regni nostri incolas occidendo, hominesque nostros de regno nostro violenter in regnum vestrum abducendo, ipsosque ibidem detinendo et incarcerando, super quibus reformandis, nuncios nostros sæpe vobis transmisimus, quæ non solum adhuc remanent incorr . . ta, verum etiam de die in diem per vos et vestros prioribus deteriora accumulatur. Vos namque cum innumerabili armatorum multitudine, exercituque vestro publice convocato, ad exhæredandum nos, tam per terram quam per mare commisistis inhumane. Nos dictas injurias, contemptus, gravamina, dampna, necnon hostiles impugnationes, ulterius sustinere non valentes, nec infidelitate et homagio vestro, licet per violentam impressionem vestram extortis manendo, contra vos et ad defensionem nostri et regni nostri, cujus defensionis et tuitioni vinculo juramenti sumus astricti, nos volentes erigere, fidelitatem et homagium vobis factam tam a nobis quam ab aliis quibuscumque regni nostri incolis fidelibus nostris ratione terrarum quas in regno vestro de vobis tenebant, ac etiam ratione menagii, seu retentionis vestræ nomine vestro, ac nomine eorundum omnium et singulorum vobis reddimus per præsentis, et cæt'.

Unde dominus rex Edwardus, super ista ingratitude mirabiliter commotus, villam de Berwike per suos secure

munivit, et ulterius inter Scotos procedere non distulit. Unde Anglorum exercitus apud castrum de Dumbarre accessit, et ibidem obviam habuit maximam multitudinem Scottorum, armata manu valida et robore grandi, et ibidem commissum est lethale bellum, sed exercitum Anglorum misericordia Dei illæsum conservavit, et Scottos in fugam convertit, fugientes ceciderunt. In illa die vero Anglorum militis et Scottorum miseria horribiliter apparuit. Et ibidem capti sunt comites et plures barones, milites, et alii magnates, per diversas partes Angliæ missi, custodiæ mancipandum. Transactis aliquot diebus, miserrimus Johannes de Baliolo, quondam rex Scotiæ, videns se omni potestate destitui, voluntati Edwardi regis Angliæ cum majoribus regni Scotiæ humiliter se submisit, qui apud Turrim Lond. ductus est custodiendum, et totum regnum Scotiæ dispositioni regis Angliæ subjectum est. bant infringere, nec ei quicquam contribuere. Unde dominus rex mirabiliter commotus gratiam curiæ suæ tam de lege communi quam speciali eis omnino interdixit. Facta autem sunt ista die Jovis ante Purificationem beatæ Mariæ. Denique dominus rex omnia layca feoda clericorum quorumcunque, cum bonis in eisdem inventis, in manu seysivit, et extendi fecit. Et statuit quod nisi infra mensem protectionem suam impetrarent, prædicta layca feoda, cum bonis in eisdem inventis, essent forisfacta. Clerum vero extra protectionem suam posuit, et de clericorum et religiosorum spoliatione multum gaudebat, ut dicebatur. Unde ab eisdem veniam et absolutionem devote postulavit, et ibidem a prædictis archiepiscopis, episcopis, et clero, comitibus et militibus, Edwardo filio suo fidelitatem fieri fecit specialem, ita quod in absentia sua ipsum tanquam dominum loco suo agnoscerent. Et sic dominus rex cum pauca milite, comitibus et baronibus sibi adversantibus, in Flandriam transfretavit, et in civitate de Gaunt diu morabatur. Et ibidem dominus rex remisit comiti Marescallo et Herefordiæ, et Johanni de Ferreriis, et omnibus aliis, malam voluntatem suam, et confirmavit per scriptum, sigillo suo signatum, magnam cartam de libertatibus Angliæ in omnibus suis articulis, et etiam quod nulla mala tolta caperetur, nisi secundum antiquam consuetudinem. Similiter autem quod nullæ misæ nec talliagia per ipsum de cætero fierent in regno sine assensu omni et voluntate; et istud scriptum traditum fuit domino archiepiscopo, vidente toto clero in capitulo Westmonasterii in concilio ibidem convocato per dominum episcopum Cestrensem et fratrem Hugonem de Maunnecestria. Iste Knutus, vir justus et potens, rex fuit Daciæ, Norwagiæ, Scotiæ, et demum Angliæ sibi subjugavit, qui in regno Angliæ confirmatus, lxxxij. M^a libri (?) ab insulanis ducans Emmam uxor Edelred in uxorem, de qua genuit Hardeknut, qui postea Romam pergens seuf(?) qui vocatur Romæ stat papa assignavit. SANCTUS EDWARDUS CONFESSOR, Idwal. Radelle.

24 annis et di.

Iste Edwardus, virgo et sanctus confessor in ævum permanens, ab angelis vocatus, in regem eligitur et consecratur Wyntoniam, die Paschæ, ducens in uxorem Godivam filiam comitis Godwyni, cujus anno regni duodecimo apud Wyndelsore strangulatus est Godwynus proditionis suæ jugulator quodam panis frusculo in prandio. Et anno ejus xiiij. combusta est Hereforde a Wallensibus cum ecclesia sancti Ethelberti. Anno ejusdem xxij. Haraldus filius comitis Godwyni subdidit sibi Walliam, et eo anno Wallenses occidunt Griffinum principem suum et caput ejus Haraldo detulerunt. Anno ejusdem xxvj., et anno gratiæ millesimo lxxvjº dedicatum est monasterium sancti Petri Westmonasterii, quod ipse fundaverat, ubi jacet translatus, relicto regno Willelmo duci Normannorum dicto Notho.

Theodorus.

Prophetia regis Edwardi, unde dum ageret in extremis sibi divinitus revelata. Arbor quælibet viridis, a suo trunco decisa, cum ad trium jugerum spacium a radice separetur, quæ cum, nulla manu hominis cogente, nulla urgente necessitate, ad suum reversa truncum, in antiquam radicem sese reciperet, resumptoque succo virens floruerit, tunc separandum est aliquod de tribulatione remedium. Hanc cum parabolam cum spiritu alacriori rex, quasi a portis mortis revocatus, dixisset, inclinato humiliter capite valedicens sæculo expiravit.

Expositio prophetiæ.

Arbor hæc Anglorum regnum gloria foliorum et fructum fœcundissimum significat, radix autem de qua totus honor iste processit regia stirps est, quæ ab Alfredo primo prothomonarcha inuncto et coronato, recta successionis linea usque ad sanctum Edwardum propagata et dirivata est. Abscisa est arbor a trunco suo quando regnum Angliæ a genere regali divisum, ad aliud semen translatum est, ad trium jugerum facta est separatio quando in trium jugerum temporibus regum nulla novis cum aliquo semine regalis conjunctio vel communio. Haraldus enim successit Edwardo, et Willelmus Haraldo, et Willelmus junior patri. Willelmo successit ad radicem arboris quando gloriosus rex Henricus, in quem totum regni decus transfusum, et nulla necessitate cogente, nulla spe lucri urgente, sed ex infuso ei amoris affectu ad neptem Edwardi, Matildam duxit uxorem, semen regium Normannorum et Anglorum jungens, de duobus unum fecit fructum, quando de ipsa noster Henricus quasi lapis factus angularis.

HARALDUS 9 MENSIBUS.

Iste Haraldus, dictus et existens proditor et perjurus, filius comitis Godwyni, thesauri raptor et cumulator, diadema invadens, se ipsum coronavit, sine assensu prælatorum et magnatum, excepto solo patre Godwyno, unde Domino ultore contra Willelmum regem in bello occubuit, proditiōis suæ reportans mercedem, et sepultus apud Waltham, et ubi prælium erat Willelmus fundavit abbathiam dictus the Abbey of Batayl.

WILLELMUS NOTHUS.

Yago. Rcsus.

Iste Willelmus dictus Nothus post conquisitionem Angliæ cum regnare cœpisset, ablata est memoria donorum, et concessit insulaniis suas antiquas leges, sancti Edwardi esse dicebant, coronatus Londoniæ apud Westmonasterium. Cujus anno tertio fugavit Swyn regem Dacorum, invadentem Humbre cum ccc. puppibus. Anno ejus quinto subjugavit sibi Scotiam, et anno ejus xv^o subjugavit sibi Walliam, et eodem anno cepit ab unaquaque hida terræ vj. s. Anno ejus xvij^o fecit inquire per suamquamque schiram Angliæ quot hidæ et jugera sufficerent uni aratro per annum, et quot animalia, quid una quam urbs, castellæ, vicus, villæ, flumen, polus, silva reddent per annum, et in thesauro reponi, quod dicitur Domesday. Ita quod una sola hida non esset de qua nesciunt cujus esset et quid valeret. Construxit abbathiam de Bello, et moriens Roberto dicto Curta-ocrea dimisit Normanniam, Willelmo 2^o filio, dicto Rufo, regnum Angliæ, et Henrico Clerico, 3^o filio, thesaurum suum, et mortuus sepultus apud Kaam in Normannia in monasterio quod ipse fundaverat.

Iste Stephanus, miles strenuus, filius comitis Blesensis, ex Adala filia regis Willelmi primi et sorore regis Henrici, quasi in ictu oculi ab Anglis in regem admissus, contra sacramentum fidelitatis quod filius regis s. imperatrici fecerat, coronatur London' die sancti Stephani, anno gratiæ millesimo .c.xxx°.vj.º, ubi tunc vovit clero [et] populo Angliæ, primo quod electioni prælatorum statum consentiret, et eisdem ecclesias suas restitueret; secundo quod nullo actionaret de propria venatione in propria silva capta, nec de vasto nemorum; tertio condonavit Denegeld, in duos solidos de qualibet hida terræ; sed nihil horum tenuit. Quarto anno regni sui, extorsit castre de Divises a Rogero Sarum episcopo, et castre de Newerke ab Alexandro Lincolnensi episcopo. Eodem anno venit imperatrix in Anglia, et ex tunc crevit dissentio in terra. 6° anno capitur rex Stephanus in bello apud Lincoln, a comite Cestriæ, et ducitur apud Yerword. Bristolle ad imperatricem, et eodem anno liberatur propter fratrem imperatricis. Viiij° statuit legatus papæ ut propter violentem manuum injectionem in clericum nullus posset absolvere nisi papa. Iste Stephanus in bello et guerra continua regnavit omnibus diebus vitæ suæ, et cum regnassit .xix. annis, mortuus est, sepultus in abbathia de Feveresham, quam ipse fundaverat.

HENRICUS SECUNDUS, 34 ANNIS ET DIMIDIO.

Iste Henricus, rex Angliæ, cum Roberto fratre suo primo anno pacificatus, dedit ei singulis annis tria millia marca, et tenuit regnum in pace, cum esset junior frater, ducens in uxorem Matildam filiam Margaretæ reginæ Scotiæ, abnepotem sancti Edwardi. Cujus regni anno 2° exulavit Robertum debelem, comitem Salopiæ; et eodem anno archiepiscopus Cantuariensis prohibuit a suo consilio Londoniensi uxores sacerdotum, ante non prohibitas. Quinto anno regni sui cepit in bello Robertum Curthuse, ducem Normanniæ apud Tener cheber, et misit eum in carcerem perpetuum, qui mortuus sepultus est apud Gloucestriam. Quo anno visæ sunt duæ lunæ in firmamento. Dedit enim Dominus isti Henrico sapientiam, victoriam,* et divitias, quibus antecessores suos omnes præcessit. Dedit enim filiam Matildam Henrico imperatori, et cepit ab unaquaque hida terræ iij. s. Edificavitque Windlesoram, et exulavit Philippum, et de Breuse, Willelmum Malet et Willelmum Baynard. Anno xi. cepit Robertum debellum in Normannia, et misit in carcerem apud Westmonasterium Warham. Isto anno primo orta est dissencio inter Radulphum archiepiscopum Eboracensem, eo quod more subijci nolebat archiepiscopo Cantuariensi. Anno ejus xx.º in redeundo Norman' submersi sunt Robertus et Willelmus filii et filia. Anno ejus .xxix. factus est Heneus primus episcopus de Ely, i. anno gratiæ c. xxx. Idem rex cum regnasset in gloria .xxxv. annis, mortuus est et sepultus in abbatia de Redynge, quam ipse fundaverat.

Matilda, ducessa Saxoniae et Sardiniae.	Elena, regina Castellae.	Comitissa Tholosi.	Johannes.
Arthurus, dux Britanniae.	Henricus, dux Saxoniae et Sardiniae.	Oetes, imperator.

Iste Henricus secundus, filius Matildæ imperatricis, et Galfridi Plantageneste, comitis Andegavensis, successit in regnum Angliæ. Regnavit prospere in magna gloria, copiosa prole ditatus, xxiiij. annis, mensibus vij., diebus quinque. Hic dum discordia duraret inter ipsum ibidem Thomam archiepiscopum Cantuariensem fecit coronari filium suum Henricum juniorem, contra libertatem ecclesiæ Cantuariensis, imitato beato Thoma dicto archiepiscopo, qui et obiit marterizatus. Unde domino irato, in cujus manu corda regum, in flore juventutis suæ ante patrem suum obiit, unde licet coronatus a Rogero Eboracensi archiepiscopo, injuriose tamen non annumeratur in ordine regum, vacatque a stipite genealogiæ, nec Willelmus nec alii qui in mari miserabiliter perierunt.

Iste Ricardus patri successit, terram sanctam simul cum Philippo rege Francorum cum magna pompa abiit, sed inglorius rediit. Captus enim fuit a duce Austriæ, quem in terra sancta offenderat, et quia bellipotens extitit, graviter redemptus est. Unde quidam inde ait,—

Christe, tui calicis prædo fit, præda salutis,
Ore brevi rejicis qui tuis ara crucis.

Iste tandem obiit in Normannia spiculatus, cum .ix. annis et dimidio regnasset, et fuit sepultus apud Ponteverdard vij. Kalendis Aprilis, anno Domini M° nonagesimo nono. Spiculatus enim erat apud castrum de Chaloson in Aquitannia in redeundo ad Angliam.

JOHANNES, 14 ANNIS ET DIMIDIO.

Iste Johannes, ex dono patris sui dominus Hiberniæ, mortuo Arthuro filio Galfredi comitis Britannicæ, successit Ricardo fratri suo, ducens in uxorem Isabellam filiam comitis Engolesmi, aliam præsumptam repudiando. Hujus quoque tempore passa est Anglia multas et diversas tribulationes, tributum novum et insolitum, interdictum, et guerram fere septennalem, ecclesia dampna irrestaurabilia, inexplicabiles oppressiones papales, et ille idem rex a ducatu Normanniæ abjudicatus sententialiter in curia Franciæ, in quo discrimen multiformi cum summa mentis amaritudine afflictam animam apud Newerke, postquam regnaverat annis xvij., mensibus quinque, diebus 4^{or}, exalavit, sepultus in monasterio Wygorniae, relinquens Henricum, filium suum, hæredem in regem loco suo coronandum.

Iste Henricus Johanni patri suo successit, prius a Gwalone legato puer coronatus, postea ab archiepiscopo Cantuariensi E. Quo coronato et in regem . . . et acclamato, pro majori parte tempestas Anglis mitigata est. Secundo anno Edwardi Lowelinus, princeps Walliæ, per parliamentum regis, in Anglia venire noluerat, sed rex adiit Walliam, castra de Flint de novo fundavit, castrum Rothelond firmavit, ubi Lowelinus subdidit se regi, dando pro transgressione .l. millia lib., et pro insula de Anglesey M^l. marcas per annum. Sed paulo post perfidus David surrexit contra regem, et in Dominica Palmarum multa mala Angligenis intulit. Adveniens tandem rex Edwardus, circa festum sancti Johannis, Walliam subjugavit, villas et terras quæ erant in medietate Walliæ suis proceribus distribuit, sed castra maritima sibi retinuit, ex quo facta tranquillitas magna sequenti tempore pervenit Wallensibus, Sed post circa festum Luciæ caput Lowelini amputatum est a Wallensibus et regi allatum Londoniæ. Cito post captus est David, frater ejus, totius mali incentor, qui in parlamento apud Salopiam dampnatur, primo

equis distractus, secundo suspensus, tertio in quarteria
divisus et per Angliæ loca distributus. De Lowelino

Anno secundo Edwardi primi nocte sanctæ Margaretæ descendit tempestas imbrium, tonitruum, et fulguris a retro seculis vix audita, concutiens sata et demergens, ita ut Londoniæ modius tritici, qui prius ad tres denarios vendebatur, ex tunc paulatim usque ad duos solidos excrevit, sicque per xl. fere annos, usque ad obitum regis Edwardi secundi, caristia bladi, ita quod aliquotiens London. modius frumenti ad x. solidos venderetur. Hoc tempore Judæi expulsi sunt ab Anglia, nec redierunt.

Per sanctum David Wallus bene metrificavit,

Per sanctos mille mendax fuit Anglicus ille.

In ultimis diebus istius Edwardi quidam Madocus Wallensis suscitavit guerram in Wallia, sed rex adveniens circa festum sancti Nicholai, cepit insulam Angleseyam, ædificavitque de novo urbem et castrum de Bello Marisco, quo tempore succisa sunt nemora in Wallia, quæ præstabant indigenis latibula tempore belli, firmavitque castra circa loca maritima, et cito post captus est Madocus. Et ab illo tempore quieverunt Wallenses a proeliis, et principatum Walliæ dedit Edwardo 2^o filio suo et comiti Castriæ, ut dicit Poli^o 7^o, capitulo 4^o.

FEUDAL MANUALS OF ENGLISH HISTORY.

No. VI.

Cronicles betwene England and Scoland sithen the commynge of Brute.

THE noble and mighty man Brute, which descended of the noble blod of Troye, with many of the same blod, arrived in this land, that tyme called Albyon, inhabitede with geauntes, whom by his mighty powair slewe and overcom, and called this lande Bretayne, after his awne name, and the people Bretons. He reigned her all his lif, and had .iij. sones, that were called Locrinus, Albanactus, and Camber, among whom he devided this land in this maner. To Locrinus al that part which is called England, that tyme called Logre; to Albanactus that part which now is called Scotland, that tyme called Albany; and to Camber that part now called Wales, which that tyme he called Cambria; reserving to Locryne, his eldest sone, the royal dignité. And after the deth of the said Brute, every of the same his thre sones entred into their landes.

It happened that two yeres after the deth of Brute, a king called Humbre entred into Albany, and slew Albanact, brother to Locrine. Locryne knowing that, cam into Albany, and chassed Humbre, which fled, and was drowned in a ryver which is now called Humbre for that cause. Then entrede the said Locryne into the land of Albany, and toke it to hymself.

Also Dunwald, king of Bretayne, slewe Satern king of Scotland, for his rebellion, and put is lande in . . . Belyne and Bren, sonnes of the said Dunwald, after the deth of their fader, in subjection departed this reame betwene them, so that Locryne shuld have the crowne of Logre, Cambre, and Cornwayle, now called England, Wales, and Cornwayle, and Bren, to reigne undre hym, shuld have Albany, now called Scotland ; for it was the old custume among Trojanes that the dignité of th' enheritaunce shuld remayne alwey to the eldest sone.

In the tyme of king Arthur, Scottes besieged the cité of Yorke, then being therin Howell, king of the Lesse Bretayne, cousyn to king Arthur, and he with an hooste cam thider and descomfited the Scottes, and chassed theym into a marice, and there besieged they soo long till they were almost famysshed. And then bisshoppes, abbottes, and men of religion, forasmoch as they were Christen people, besought the same king Arthur to take theym to his mercy and grace, and to graunte theym a porcion of the same cuntré to dwell in under everlasting subgection. The king, understanding their lamentacions, moeved with pitié, toke theym to his grace. And ther-upon they com to hym, and fell down before hym, and ded hym homage and feaulté, and were sworn his liegemen and subjettes. And then ordeyned Angesell to be king of Scottes. Also the said king Arthur, holding his royall fest at Carlion, had there al the kinges that were subjettes unto hym, among the which the said Angesell, king of Scottes, ded his due service for the reame of Scoteland, and bare king Arthur swerd before hym.

In the yere of oure Lord Jhesu Christ ix^e and oone, Edward king of England, son to king Alvered, had under his dominacion and obediens the kinges of Scottes, of Humbre and Stretgle Waleys, as it appereth in Cronicles writen by Marion, a Scotte, Roger of Hovyden, and William Malmesbury.

In the yere of oure Lord ix^exxij^u, the same king Edward was president and gouvernour of all the people of England, Cumberland, Scottes, Danes, and Bretons.

King Athelstone conquered Scotland, with many grete batailles, and as he lay in his tente besides York, the king of Scottes feyned him to be mynstrell, and harped before king Athelstone, oonly to espye his ordenaunce, and his people the same night com to the kinges oste, and slewe Targe archebisshop of York, and all the people in his company. The King had no wepon to defende hymself, and prayed to God and to seynt Adelme of socour, which by miracle toke him a swerd in his hand, and therwith he descounfited al the Scottes that night. Then ordeigned king Athelstone, and made Constantyn king of Scottes to reigne undre him, seyng that it was more glorioux and worshipfull to mak a king, then to be a king; and after his said victory, he yave due laude and thanks to God and to saint Johan of Beverley, and besought hertily that by merite of the said saint Johan he might have som knowelege and evident tokyn, by the which they that were at that tyme, and also tho that shuld succede him, might parfitly knowe if the king of Scottes, and the rebellious of Scotlond, ought to be subjettes to the reame of England. After the which his devoute prayers, he sawe rokkes besides a place called Dumbarre, and he drewe oute his swerd, and smote into a stone, which yave place unto the swerd, and was made holowe by Goddes might and vertu the lenght of an elne, which evidence and prouf yet endureth unto this day, and is rehersed in the legende of Saint Johan in the churche of Beverley for a perpetuall memory.

In the yere of oure Lord .ix.^oxlviij. Eldrede, king of England and brother to king Adelstone, toke homage and feaulté of Irisy king of Scottes, and Malcolm king of Cumbreland did homage to king Edgare, and besides theym twey had subjettes unto hym syx othre kinges, that is to wit, Malcom king of the Iles, Dunwald, Siferth, Howel, Jacob, and Inkhill. The said king Edgare, sitting in a barge and stering the same in a water called Dee, made the said king to rowe the barge, and said, "My successoures may be joyfull to have the prerogatif of so gret worship, and to have in subgection the powair of so many kinges."

In the yere of oure Lord M'xvij, Knute, king of England, conquered and subdued in bataill Malcolm, king of Scottes, and toke of him homage and feaulté.

In the yere of our Lord M'lvj., Saint Edward, king of England, toke from Malcolm, king of Scottes, his lif and his kingdom, and made Malcolm, son of the king of Northumbreland, king of Scottes.

In the yere of our Lord M^llxviii. William conquerour, king of England, vainquished in bataill at Albruch Malcolm, king of Scottes, and toke of hym feaultie and homage.

Malcolm king of Scottes did also homage and feaultie to William Rufus, king of England, which William Rufus afterward deposed and put Dunwald from his kingdom of Scotland, and for certain causes reasonable and rightfull made Duncan, son of Malcolm, king of Scottes, and toke of hym due homage and feaultie, in the yere of oure Lord M^{iiiij}^{xx} and xiiij. And after that the same Duncan was slayn. Then the said Dunwald usurped the kingdom ayene, but king William Rufus put hym out, and made Edgare, the son of Malcolm, king of Scottes, which did to hym his due service.

In the yere of oure Lord Mⁱ c., after the deth of king William Rufus, succeded hym king Henry his brother, and in the vijth yere of his reigne the said king Edgare died, and after hym reigned in Scotland Alexander, brother to the said Edgare, by graunte and suffrance of the said king Henry.

David, king of Scottes, did homage furst of al temporal men of England to Mawde emperesse, doughter and heire to the said king Henry.

In the yere of oure Lord Mⁱ c. xxxvj., in the furst yere of the reigne of king Stephyn, the said David, king of Scottes, required to do his homage, wherunto he refused, because he had doone it before tyme to the said Mawde emperes. That notwithstanding, Henry, son of the said David, did his homage to king Stephyn.

In the yere of oure [Lord] Mⁱ c. cl. William, king of Scottes, and David, his brother, and all the erles and barons of the realme of Scotland, becom liegemen to Henry, king of England, son of Henry the second, and did hym homage and feaultie in the morne after his coronacion, saving the feaultie that they ought to his fader lyving.

In the yere of oure Lord M'.c.lxxv., and in the xx. yere of the reigne of king Henry the second, the said king William of Scotland rebelled, and com into Northumbreland, making grete warre and slaughter, wherfore the knightes, gentilmen, and yemen of the counties of York and Northumbreland assembled and toke the same king William at Alnewik, and brought hym to king Henry into Normandy, and thider went Richard, bisshop of Saint Andrew, and other bisshopes and lordes for his delivraunce. To whom he was delivred, and after that ther was made a composicion and accord bitwixt the said kynges, which composicion was with the grete seal of Scotland sealed, and also with the seales of all the nobles and lordes of the same realme, conteigning that from thensforth they shuld hold the reame of Scotland of the king of England, and therto they did homage and feaultie.

In the yere of oure Lord M'.c. iiijth and v., in the moneth of August, at Carlile, Rouland Talnaten, lord of Galwey, did homage and feaultie to the said king Henry, with al that helde of hym.

In the xxijth yere of the reigne of king Henry the second, Gylbert, son of Fergis, prince of Galwey, com into England, and did homage and feaultie to the said king Henry, and leide Duncan his son in hostage for conservation of peax.

After the deceasse of king Henry the second, the said William, king of Scottes, com to Canterbury, and in the presence of Teobald, archebisshop there, he did homage and feaultie to king Richard.

In the yere of oure Lord M'c.iiij^{xx}.xix. Johan, king of England, sent to William, king of Scottes, to come and do his homage, which William com to Lincoln in the moneth of Decembre the same yere, and did his homage there upone a hill in the presens of Hubert, archebisshope of Canterbury, and of al the people there assembled, and there he was sworne upone the crosse of the said Hubert; and also he graunted, and by his chartre confermed, that he shuld mary Alexander his son, as his liegeman, alwey to hold of the king of England, promitting also the same king William that he and his son Alexander shuld kepe and hold feith and allegeaunce to Henry son of the said king Johan, as to theire chiefe lord, ayenst almaner men.

In the yere of oure Lord M'cc.xvj., in the xxxv. yere of the reigne of king Henry, son of king Johan, the same king Henry and the quene were at York, at the fest of Christmasse, for the solemnizacion of a mariage, made in the fest of saint Stephyn the martir the same yere, betwene Alexander, king of Scottes, and Margaret, the kinges doughter, and there the same Alexander did homage to the king of England.

In bulles of divers popes were monicions made to the kinges of Scottes, that they shuld observe and truely kepe suche appointementes as have ben made betwene the kinges of England and of Scotland, and that the kinges of Scotland shuld hold the reame of Scotland of the kinges of England, upon peyn of curse and enterditing.

Also, there as William, king of Scottes, had put Johan archebisshop of Saint Andrewe out of his bisshopriche, pope Clement wrote to Henry, king of England, that he shuld meove and enduce the same William, and, if nede were, require, or ellis by royal powair compelle hym to leve his rancour ayenst the said bisshope, and suffer hym to occupie and holde his said bisshopriche.

In the yere of oure Lord M'cc. lxxiiij. Edward, king of England the furst after the conquest, was crowned at Westmestir, in the fest of th' Assumpcion of oure Lady, at which solempnit  was Alexaunder, king of Scottes, which did homage then to the said king Edward.

In the yere of oure Lord M'cc.iiij^{xx}ij, and in the xxj. yere of the reigne of the said king Edward, Johan Balioll was chosen king of Scotland, at Norham, by al the lordes of Scotland spiritual and temporal and commons, and by th' assent and suffraunce of the said king of England. He was crowned at Scone, and did his homage at Newcastle, in the fest of saint Stephyn the martir, and there all the lordes of Scotland sware feaultie to the said king Edward, and every of theym set his seale to a composicion, made in writing, to kepe true feith and obedience to the said king Edward and to his heires, kinges of England, for evermore, as to their chief lord of Scotlande.

In the yere of oure Lord M'cc.iiij^{xx}xv. the same Johan, king of Scottes, contrary to his feith and allegeaunce, rebelled ayenst king Edward, and com into England, and brent and slewe. Wherupon king Edward, with a grete hoste, went to Newcastle upon Tyne, and passed the water of Twede, and besieged Barwyk, and gate it, and the castell of Dunbarre, and were slayn xv.^mvij^o Scottes, and soo proceded furth, and gate the castell of Rokysburgh, and the castelles of Geynburgh, Strynchyn, and Godworth, and his people forreyde al the land. The same Johan, king of Scottes, considering that he was not of powair to withstande the said king Edward, sent his lettres and besought hym of treatie and peax, which the same king Edward benignely graunted, and sent unto hym ayene that he shuld com to the towne of Brethyn, and bring thider the grete lordes of Scotland. The king of England sent thider Antony Beke, bisshop of Durham, with his royall powair to conclude the said treatie, and there it was agreed that the said king Johan and all the Scottes shuld barely and clerely submitte theym self to the kinges will, and that submission to be perfourmed, the said king of Scottes leiede his son in hostage and pledge, and therupone he made his lettres, sealed with the comon seal of Scotland, by the which he knowleged his symplenes and his grete offence doon to his lord Edward, king of England, and so with his full powair and free will yelded up all the land of Scotland, with all the people and homages of the same. Then the said king Edward went furthe to see the mounteyns, and he understanding that all was in quiete and peax, turned to th' abbey of Scone, of chanons regulers, where he toke the stone that is called the regal of Scotlonde, upon the which the kinges of Scotland were wonte to sitt in the tyme of the coronacion for a trone, and sent it at Westminstre, commaunding to make a cheyre therof for prestes singing masses at the high auter; which cheyre was made, and standeth yet there this day.

In the yere of oure Lord M'cc and xvj. the king helde his parlement at Berwik, and there he toke homage singlerly of all the lordes and nobles of Scotland, and for a perpetuall memory of the same, they made their lettres patentes, sealed with their grete sealles, and than the king of England made William Waren, erle of Surrey and Sussex, wardeyn of Scotland, Hugh of Cressingham tresorer, and William Ormesby justice. And then sent he the king of Scottes to the towre of London, and Johan Comyne, th'erle of Badenanth, th'erle of Bohan, and othre lordes of Scotland, to warde into divers places on this side the Trente. And after that, in the yere of oure Lord M^{cc}.iiij^{xxv}ij., at the fest of Cristmas, the king called before hym the said Johan, king of Scottes, and all thoes that he so had committed to warde, and saide that he wold not distroye ner bren their castelles, townes, ner landes, but he wold be recompensed for his costes and dommages susteigned in his werre. Wherupone the said King Johan, and al other that were in warde, answered and said that they hade nothing, for their lyves and deth were in his handes, with their goodes. The king, upon that answeare, moeved with mercy and pité, graunted theym their lyves, so that they shuld doo their homage and feaulté ayene. And therupone the said king Johan, and all the other aforesaid, did homage and made their othes solemply at the high awter in the church of th'abbey of Westmynster, upon the holy sacrement of oure Lordes body, that they and every of theym shuld holde and kepe true feith, obedience, and allegeaunce to the said king Edward, and to his heires, kinges of England. And wheras the said king of Scottes shuld see the kinges baner of
